THE DARKMAN COMETH
PARANOID PREMIERES ONLINE

Los Angeles, CA (January 25, 2002) - Officially hosted by iFilm.com, Paranoid makes its World Wide Web debut. Adapted from the poem "Paranoid: A Chant" by Stephen King, those few critics fortunate enough to have previewed the short, have rewarded it with astonishing reviews.

Promptly following the release of Paranoid on DVD (November 2001 subscriber issue of Total Movie Magazine) today marks the first wide release of the film since its late Summer 2001 completion.

As of this release, the Internet audience may view and rate Paranoid in its entirety on iFilm.com. Quick to keep up with technology, Adakin Productions is in the completion stage of providing a high-resolution downloadable version of the film on the official website (www.paranoidthemovie.com). Providing the online community with the highest quality presentation possible, director Jay Holben worked closely with MAP-Media CEO, Miles Imel (www.map-media.com) to author an extremely high-resolution version of the film. As a result, the final downloadable version may be easily accessed by users with high-speed Internet connections (users with dial-up connections may view the film on iFilm.com). The launch date for this version is expected as early as February 1, 2002.

Paranoid will be available for viewing or downloading exclusively through mid-August.
